*This map does not describe road quality. It varies greatly by weather and other factors. There is no guarantee that roads / tracks with heavy traffic are easier to bike than those where few cars drive. Steep slopes may be expected even if they are not shown on the map. Travelling in the highlands can be dangerous.

There may be more fords than are shown on the map. The symbols and classification only indicate where the most water crossings is to be expected. Drought, rain, melting and thawing of snow, make the mapping of fords very inaccurate. Car traffic numbers are summertime statistics.

This is an overview map which does not provide exhaustive information. Before setting off, one needs to gather information about the road conditions as well as accommodation and other services in the area to be travelled. It is particularly important to be well informed when planning to travel in the highlands.

Practical hints for Cyclists using Public Transport

-Cyclists bringing their bikes on flights to Iceland need to pack them in suitable boxes.
-At Keflavik airport there are no facilities for assembling or disassembling bikes.
-Reykjavik City Hostel offers facilities to assemble and disassemble bikes and will store transport bike boxes. This is also the location of the Reykjavik camping area. The bus takes you between the airport and the Hostel. At Keflavik airport, Bilahotel offers storage of transport boxes. Some fees may apply.
-In most domestic airports you will find some space to work on your bike. Just be considerate and don't take up too much space.
-For getting out of Reykjavik, public transport to a town outside the city (e.g. Akranes, Borgarnes or Hveragerði) is a good option. It is cheap and there are two bikes on each bus if space permits. Transport of bikes in the buses of Strætó is free of charge.

-By starting the trip from Reykjavik on the bus the cyclist avoids the hectic and traffic-loaded roads leading to and from the city. By taking the bus to Akranes or Borgarnes, one bypasses the only tunnel in Iceland that is not passable by bike: the Hvalfjörður tunnel. Leaving the bus in Kjalarnes on the way to the West and cycling the Hvalfjörður fjord is especially pleasant, though. The fjord enjoys fantastic nature and sparse car traffic.
-In Iceland public transport buses are operated by several companies. The map reflects which company operates which routes. The operators have homepages showing the seasonal schedules, prices and other useful info. Apart from Strætó, most collect fees for the transport of bicycles. It is advisable to check beforehand the conditions of the operator you plan to travel with.

-You can get on/off anywhere the main road meets smaller roads on the route in rural areas. Just be sure to make clear if you want the bus to stop. In the Capital area and other areas with local buses, they only stop at marked stops.
-For routes 79, 83, 84 and 85, please consult the service centre at tel. 540 2700.
-In rural areas, bikes are put in the luggage compartments of the buses or on bike racks. The number of bikes that can be allowed on any given bus can not be guaranteed, but bikes are usually allowed as long as there is room for them.
-For all rural buses, you can buy tickets on the bus with cash or credit cards. When you pay for a single fare in local Strætó in Reykjavik, you must have the exact amount, as there is no change.
-Most domestic ferries do charge for the transport of bicycles.

Cycling in Iceland

If you are planning an adventurous cycling trip, Iceland is unique in many ways. It is safe to travel here if you are properly prepared, and you will find Icelanders both helpful and friendly. You can plan your own trip but there are also a few companies that specialize in guided bike tours.

The weather
Iceland's cool, oceanic climate is quite mild for its latitude, thanks to the Gulf Stream. The summers are short, and the best time to visit is late May to early September. The average daytime temperature around the coast during May to September is 10-12°C (50-55°F). Average daily sunshine in July and August is 5-6 hours, and during the summer months the nights are bright: on clear days you have 24 hours of daylight and even the midnight sun near the Arctic Circle.

However, the weather is extremely changeable and unpredictable so you should always be prepared for the unexpected. You can encounter strong sudden winds and even snow in the middle of summer. Even if you stick to the main road, you should always follow the weather forecast and in all cases carry warm clothing with you. Try to keep your plans flexible so you can go with the wind instead of struggling against it. If you must go against the wind, you might consider cycling in the late evening and in the night (in June and July) as the wind often calms down in the evening. Benefits of this also include far less motor traffic on the busier roads and the wonders of experiencing sunset and sunrise, but of course less access to shops and services.

You can get the weather forecast by telephone: 902 0600 or just by asking the locals. Icelanders follow the weather forecast almost religiously. At altitudes in the interior highlands the temperatures are of course lower. Check the weather forecast at the Icelandic Meteorological Office <http://en.vedur.is> or <http://en.vedur.is/m> for mobile phones.

The roads
A rather large portion of Iceland's road system is made up of gravel roads, especially those with less traffic. The main highway around Iceland, Route 1, circles the country in around 1400 kilometers.

Once you get away from the South-West, the traffic becomes less but it is still fast and the roads get narrower, especially once you get off route 1. On the gravel roads you may encounter long stretches with potholes, "washboards" or loose sand but far less traffic.

Cyclists are allowed in all tunnels except the one under Hvalfjörður north of Reykjavik.

The interior highlands
The mountain roads across the interior highlands are usually closed until late May or even as late as July, depending on the road and the weather conditions in spring. The Road Administration has information on mountain roads and when they open in the summers at www.vegagerdin.is/english

The highland roads are all rough gravel/dirt roads of various qualities from packed mud to washboards, loose gravel and even sand which may be impossible to cycle when it has been dry for some period. Many rivers must be crossed at fords and can become dangerous in or after rain, and in the case of glacial rivers, in warm periods. You may therefore have to wait until late night or early morning to cross some glacial rivers during the summer. Mountain bikes with fat studded tires for good tracking and comfort and low gear ratios to help climbing steep hills are recommended. Please remember that in the highlands the nearest lodging can be far away. The highlands are generally devoid of shops and any services. Terrible storms may rage. Large areas have no mobile telephone coverage and some tracks are very lonely.

The map overlay only shows the amount of traffic and where loose sand can be expected. It shows only the major fords. Please read the legend to the map carefully. Those who plan to travel in the interior highlands, must acquire further information, not covered by this map.

Accommodation
The Cycling Map shows urban areas in Iceland where camping or indoor accommodation is available. In the rural areas camping and other accommodation are only marked if they are 20 km or further away from urban places.
Huts in the highlands may (quite likely) be full and need to be booked well in advance.

In general travellers are allowed to put up their tents everywhere except on cultivated land, too close to residential buildings and especially protected areas. It is a common courtesy to ask farmers for permission before camping on their land.

Food and drink
Food can be purchased only in towns and some other highway locations. You will therefore have to take food for several days when you are crossing the highlands. As Iceland is sparsely populated there may be 100 to 200 km between shops even on the Ring Road between Mývatn and Egilsstaðir and Höfn and Skaftafell.

Water can usually be accessed quite easily in the countryside from streams and rivers. However in sand and lava areas water needs to be carried. Never take water from areas where farms or fields are upriver. There you can visit the farms and get tap water. Water from glacial rivers should only be drunk in emergency and preferably filtered. Usually 1 to 2 litres of water carrying capacity is enough.
